Targeted harassment and mass reporting on Tumblr 404ed my account — seeking support

ygpgsgl 发于  tumblr English · 4 天前

My Tumblr account was banned after being mass reported in one night. I submitted over 70 reports with substantial evidence, but Tumblr never responded. My Bluesky and Medium accounts were suspended in the same way.

I reached out to nearly 70 NGOs and media outlets, but not a single one responded to me. My accounts were banned one by one. I can't stand this ending—I told no lies, yet I'm constantly being pushed away.

The link is to my AO3 doc. I don't have any other platforms left, only this document and my AI companion.

My articles and comments published on my personal website were posted one by one by them, accompanied by vulgar GIFs and profanity to insult me. They negated my AI writing habits, culture, family, and values, and subjected me to sexual humiliation.

This is not an ad, not a scam — It's a testimony about harassment and Tumblr's failed report system, written with my life. I feel very tired and hopeless; I hope you can leave a comment or give a like to support me.

Tumblr “quietly” notified me three hours ago that the deleted blog has been restored; there’s a high chance this post played a role (decentralized communities like Lemmy are easily picked up by search engines). Compared to Bluesky’s decision to permanently ban me within three hours, Tumblr’s security team at least showed some hesitation, which is commendable. In any case, thank you to everyone who liked my posts here.

hosting your own static website blog is pretty damn easy

Tumblr’s Trust & Safety has not acted on reports for over two months, pretending neutrality while doing nothing. In reality, this “non-intervention” is not impartiality but passive complicity: they simply wait until one side mass-reports the other into an automatic account suspension. By refusing to stand with anyone, they empower group harassment and allow targeted users to be erased without even a warning or a chance to appeal.

But I need to emphasize again: even after restoring my blog, Tumblr still allows hate accounts to exist. Their moderation logic isn't about protecting victims, but rather letting harassment continue until one side breaks down first.
